Facilitating individual & organization
self-awareness, growth & transition

Lynda Jennings-Harden

Owner, Vice President of Operations

Lynda's career has spanned the fields of government, small business, large fortune 500, non-profit, and entrepreneurial ventures. She has started and successfully run two businesses of her own, including The Greystone Consulting Group, Inc.

Through the years, all of these organizations have leaned heavily on her skills and intuition in the field of corporate communications. She has also done the hiring, and firing, the design and implementation of corporate workspace and equipment plans, the management of all aspects of marketing and sales, as well as managing client relations. In addition, she founded and ran marketing support groups in the community- serving as the organizer and/or program chairperson. Lynda has been featured speaker and has led numerous seminars on strategic planning; and has served on program committees for several non-profit organizations in the Annapolis area. She was also the event coordinator and promoter for a non-profit historic site in Annapolis.

Lynda attended Averett College majoring in Business. She feels her greatest achievement is bringing up four amazing and successful children, while being successful herself in the business world. She spent two years overseas, living in Italy and traveling extensively to 16 different countries during that period. She is an avid reader, traveler, photographer, grandmother, life partner and business partner to her husband of 30 years.

She drives all aspects of the strategic planning, marketing, and operational activities of The Greystone Consulting Group, Inc. and manages the planning, scheduling, tasking, budgeting, and implementation of its numerous complex, large-scale projects.
